INTERNATIONAL GRADUATE PROGRAMS by SITE 国际经济贸易学院

SITE offers international programs of study leading to Master's degrees in International Graduate Programs in Applied Economics (IGPAE), International Graduate Program in International Business (IGPIB), International Graduate Program in International Development (IGPID) and a new program, International Graduate Program in Finance (IGPF).

Program of Study

The International Graduate Programs may be completed within one year. The minimum length of stay in the Program is one calendar year, and the maximum time for completion of a master's degree is within three years. This time limit is counted from the time students enter the graduate program, regardless of any leave of absence taken. There is no thesis requirement for the program. However, students can choose to complete a thesis, which is equivalent to 6 credits of elective courses. The graduation ceremony is held once a year in June and the Master's degrees are conferred twice a year in June and December.

Conditional Offer

A conditional offer means that there are conditions an applicant must satisfy in order to receive the Master of Economics. If applicants have received a conditional offer, this will be noted in the details of the "Offer of Admission" letter. An applicant with no intermediate-level Micro-, Macro- and Econometrics experience, and University level courses in calculus, accounting and statistics may be conditionally accepted. For those with deficiencies, the normal procedure is for the student to take qualifying courses to eliminate the deficiencies in one or two sessions. Credits taken to fulfill the requirements of the qualifying courses shall not be used for credit for the degree requirement of 37 credits.

Courses in other Master's programs

International Graduate Students are permitted to take up to 16 credits, i.e., three sessions, at the 500 level, from other Master level courses offered by SITE in a related discipline, with permissions from a Program Director of the International Graduate Program.

International Graduate Program in Finance

Each student in IGPF must complete 37 graduate credits of course work: 12 credits in four core courses, 5 credits of two field courses and 20 credits of elective courses. Students who complete all required course work with grades above 60 on a 100 scale will receive a Master's degree in Finance. Students who finish only part of required course work may be issued a course certificate.
